Q: SQLAlchemy, Python dictionary/list inside dictionary/list I'm creating a REST API on Flask using SQLAlchemy. I'd like to do something like this, but the entity field is a list of dictionaries. posts = db.session.query(posts).filter(posts.entity.c.title == "Devops").all() I would like to do something like this, but i don't know how to do it posts_list = [] for post in posts: post_list = [] for entity in post.entity: for ip in entity.ip: post_list.append(ip) A: You can create a new query for posts_list like this: posts_list = db.session.query(posts) \ .with_for_fields(posts.entity.c.ip, flatten=True) \ .filter(posts.entity.c.title == "Devops") \ .order_by(posts.id) A: Your second code sample is not a list comprehension. You are trying to iterate over the post.entity collection, which is a list of dictionaries, and within those dictionaries, iterate over their ip key. You can use the getattr(obj,attr) technique to easily pull out an object's attribute without invoking it's getter method: posts_list = [] for post in posts: post_list.append([getattr(entity, 'ip'), post.id]) for entity in post.entity: for ip in getattr(entity, 'ip'): post_list.append(ip) What's happening above is that when the for entity in... loop iterates over post.entity, each iteration it returns an instance of the (custom) object called entity, which contains a collection of ip objects. Within that collection, the for ip in getattr(entity, 'ip') loop actually gets the
