The company's stock was up 7% last week on the back of strong earnings (is that still OK to say after the election?). Video from Jim Cramer's Mad

Money program Published on Oct. 7, 2016 Watch Jim Cramer explain a bump to Nasdaq. If you're a Netflix subscriber, you'll know that the company's stock has been up and down of late. As for why? Well, if you're looking for the latest episode of Mad Money, your best source of information is actually the quarterly investor calls that the company holds. If you're like me, you'd prefer to get the info from Jim Cramer than a call from an "excitable" investor, but that's OK - if you want to get the latest Cramer impressions, check out what he's saying at CNBC.com. I, of course, like getting a regular reminder of the latest video clips from the show, so I've started following Jim Cramer on his Twitter feed. And speaking of Jim, he has some company on his social media feeds: the Mad Money team. "Inbound 2016 media coverage rating over 20,000 journalists with human beings at their dispatching hub with full timesharing," Jim Cramer promised. You may not actually be able to attend the next round of investor meetings, but you can listen to Jim Cramer every week via Mad Money podcast or on his Twitter feed. Posted by CNBC.com NEW
