"The future is not Arab." Most women across the Arab world are either stay-at-home or work in the fields. But the need for education and professionals is growing at an incredibly fast rate. And this is pushing the current system to its limits. "We need to look at ways to turn the tide," said Dr. Mohammad Almajid, a Saudi who works with the World Bank and the United Nations. There is a dire need for better schools and more education in the best of times, but in times of crisis, the scarcity of resources can be disastrous. For example, when the Syrian war started in 2011, about 6 million people had been forced to flee their country and find shelter in neighboring countries, Turkey, Lebanon, Iraq, Jordan and Egypt. Syrians filled every available shelter in the region, while about 1.5 million children in countries that border Syria were denied education because of poverty, lack of access and the war. "That was the moment when everyone agreed to help," said Dr. Almajid. "The World Bank and IOM proposed a $500 million program that helped provide financial help to the countries hosting refugees." And then, disaster struck. He recalled that then-U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton sent letters to Syrian President Bashar al-Assad as well as to the leaders of Jordan, Turkey and Lebanon saying that the war was rapidly changing the context in which Syrians were fleeing and that refugees were being harmed by being forced to reside in undersized camps. "Every year, the flow of refugees slowed until it became a trickle," said Dr. Almajid. "Now I can see it's starting to c9d1549cdd

on a Mission Lazr is an agency with a wide-ranging mission. Its new META initiative is a balanced-growth approach – with an emphasis on M = vision, E = education, and T = technology How about order, consistency, repetition, and simplicity? The META team says that LAZR is a brand with a mission, one that stretches from design to production and from the materials used in its fabrication to the services it offers. But what about the name itself? Well, there are a few theories about how the name LAZR originates. There's even a very popular hypothesis that the name came about in the early years of the 20th century when someone decided it would be a great joke to call the company, No. 1 Los Angeles Zipper. We definitely appreciate the name and refer to it lovingly as part of our very own LAZR branding language. In this article, we'll describe how LAZR put its brand and many other such things into place, including its Responsible Business Practices (RBP) framework and META initiative. LAZR of course is a systematic building block for the company's global strategy. "LAZR is our 'Social Enterprise' — an ecosystem of alternative building and sourcing that produces sustainably, efficiently, and flexibly, to deliver value both socially and economically, for our customers and our communities," explained CEO Bernie Vollmar. But LAZR itself, one might ask? After all, there are several known examples of companies that reinterpret their company name to make it meaningful. Try saying it backward: Lazr'd Definitely LAZR As stated, the official name of the company is "LAZR." As its founding story goes, one of LAZR's founding partners, John Pepito, was marketing director at Procter & Gamble. He knew the demographic the company was going after, and so, he decided to create a product for adult men—namely underwear. The first product he created was Fruit of the Loom Ozark pants; the brand was launched in 2000.
