Ever wanted to play a real time landmines game without the risk of losing your life in a trivial amount of time? Give yourself some airtime and bomb away in Dig Up The Landmines! It's the brainchild of Virtual Reality developer Moonluna Studios, which started when technology let us fly in our favorite game Mario 64. In this engine designed game you have to venture to various islands and dig through the sand to find the landmines. And in a stroke of genius you will get a game that gives you the element of having to think, whilst being in the comfort of a VR headset. You will start each time from your home and have a helicopter waiting for you to take you to your next destination. A: Dig Up The Landmines! is not available on any stores I can find and is only available for those wanting to try the game. The game is a remake of the classic minesweeper from the 80's. A remake that is just as incredible as it is classic. To play the game is as easy as clicking in the game, just a few buttons are needed to play. Move to the tile you want to place landmines Click on the tile to place the landmines there Press A to place the landmines The game is simple but it has the same depth you would find in Minesweeper, due to the fact that you need to dig through the sand and the movement of the tiles to place your landmines, makes it a game that is infinitely playable. The game is sandbox and doesn't have goal or achievements and its on a Steam page that is marked as paid but you can download it for free. The game has a great level editor, and you can make your own maps or use public ones in the directory. Check it out if you want a game that reminds you of the days of Minesweeper back in the day. The cornerstones of today's smartphone designs are the screens, the case (and the battery) and the processor inside. But not always. What if the next iteration of your smartphone has no screen? Or no case? Or no processor? What if the smartphone that runs your power-hungry apps is made from naturally-sourced materials? According to Forbes, robotics and artificial intelligence expert Marcus Hooper, founder of startup Kuna Robotics, is developing the perfect vision-free
