The pathophysiological mechanism of the myasthenia gravis (MG) has not yet been clarified and appropriate animal models are not available. Therefore, a well-controlled study of the physiological function of the neuromuscular junction (NMJ) in MG was conducted. The myasthenic function of the diaphragm was studied in 76 patients with MG (58 women, 18 men; mean age: 46 years) by single fiber and nerve-muscle preparation. The following parameters were investigated in 50 patients with ocular MG (OG) and 26 patients with generalized MG (GMG). (1) Maximum charge transfer velocity of end plate potential (mV/sec): there was no difference between patients with OG and GMG. (2) Depression potential amplitude: the average depression potential amplitude in GMG was significantly lower than that in OG. (3) Frequency of end plate potential: there was no difference between patients with OG and GMG. (4) Reaction time of end plate potential: there was no difference between patients with OG and GMG. (5) Amplitude of end plate potential: there was no difference between patients with OG and GMG. (6) Excitability of end plate potential: there was no difference between patients with OG and GMG. These findings indicate that the NMJ may not play an important role in the pathogenesis of the myasthenic process in MG.Q: Weird problem with PHP (newbie) so I'm pretty new to PHP and I was wondering if there's any difference when calling objects directly and when using an array.
