The present disclosure relates generally to a broadcast television system and, more specifically, to a server for a broadcast television system. A broadcast television system is a group of devices that transmit and receive audio, video and/or data signals to multiple receivers using a single broadcast medium. The broadcast medium may be, for example, a satellite, cable, terrestrial or other such broadcast medium that allows a group of devices to communicate with each other. A typical broadcast television system includes a multi-cast distribution facility, a broadcast distribution facility, one or more headends and one or more set top boxes in communication with the multi-cast distribution facility and the broadcast distribution facility. The multi-cast distribution facility receives audio, video and data signals from service providers and converts the signal to a broadcast signal for distribution to multiple headends. The multi-cast distribution facility may also convert the received broadcast signals to a different broadcast signal for transmission to the set top boxes. The headends then transmit the received signals to the set top boxes. The set top boxes decode the received broadcast signals and supply the decoded signals to one or more television sets and/or to other output devices, such as DVD players, set-top boxes and/or other devices. Some network management applications are used to manage a broadcast television system. These management applications may be, for example, a headend management system or a network management system. As part of the management applications, one or more configuration files may be used to communicate configuration information between the management applications. When a set top box is added to a network, a set top box manufacturer may also provide a complete or partial set of configuration files corresponding to the newly added set top box. The management application is then used to transfer the configuration files associated with the new set top box to the headend of the system. When a set top box is added to a network, a set top box manufacturer may also provide a set of configuration files corresponding to the new set top box. These configuration files may include information used to configure the set top box for receiving and/or decoding a broadcast signal and also to configure the set top box for communicating with various other devices, such as a multi-cast distribution facility, a broadcast distribution facility, the headend and/or other set top boxes. The configuration files for the new set top box may be compatible with the management applications used for the broadcast television system. In such an instance, the set top box may be added to the broadcast television system without major modifications to the existing management application.

You could just project the class_user to a class_userlist property in your select clause. var data = (from u in db.class_user select new { u.id,
