The present invention relates to a vehicle velocity control apparatus for a vehicle. More particularly, the present invention relates to a vehicle velocity control apparatus having a target velocity map based on vehicular conditions such as the temperature of the brakes and the temperature of the engine, and a set member which is varied in accordance with the traveling conditions of the vehicle, and is used for a vehicle velocity control based on a comparison between a target velocity map and an actual traveling velocity of the vehicle. Conventionally, a vehicle velocity control apparatus comprising a target velocity map having a desired velocity corresponding to vehicular conditions such as the temperature of the brakes and the temperature of the engine and a set member corresponding to the traveling conditions of the vehicle is known. When it is desired to accelerate the vehicle, a target vehicle velocity is searched from the target velocity map, and the target vehicle velocity is displayed as a velocity chart on a display, for example. In accordance with the target vehicle velocity, a control means carries out a control so as to control the engine speed and the throttle opening. When, however, the temperature of the vehicle, that is, the temperature

I'm trying to figure out how to create a WCF service which will connect to a database. If I understand correctly, the app.config file will be used to connect to the database, and the IIS will serve requests to the service using the url mentioned in the app.config. The problem I'm having is that I'm not able to use xml.net in my WCF service to serialize and deserialize objects. When I do, it gives me an error about how I can't use an "XML namespace for an app.config based WCF service." How can I use xml.net to serialize and deserialize objects when I'm using an app.config file for connection to a database? A: There are some code samples which demonstrate how to use Configuration Manager class. It may be useful for you. A: Just to help anyone who finds this question on Google or when the solution doesn't come easily to them. This link came up as the closest, and I just went to it. In my case, I had a similar error trying to use a WCF service from within an MVC app. This link indicated that the issue was with the DataContract that I was trying to pass to my WCF service. My problem was that I had mistakenly added the DataContract attribute to the class that the WCF service was calling. If I'd simply removed that attribute from the class, then everything worked fine. I mean, every time I come in here and just go crazy on the comics, you guys are so awesome with it, and it's like "YES! THANK YOU." And 6d1f23a050
