My goal is to dynamically create and delete items. I have a series of `_.each()` functions within which the first one calls the next one. I think I'm getting hung up on how to pass variables and how the nested `_.each()` functions work. Can anyone help? My latest attempt produces an error saying that `i` is not defined. Here's my code.

I found this sentence in the Scripps National Spelling Bee competition. (Noun) The defending champion and the reigning champion may not be selected to compete in the same category in a given year. Is there any rule about using 'prefer' in prepositions? A: First, there is no hard and fast rule for the word prefer as a preposition. Prefer is a versatile word with an expansive meaning. It can be used in both transitive and intransitive senses. a. to like or prefer, usually in a favorable or to a greater degree than another or others; especially : to prefer one thing to another or to have a greater liking or affection for: to prefer music to a concert b. to choose or prefer; choose c. to find or seek for; seek out: to prefer a party with free food to one with no charge d. to desire to have or take; desire e. to take advantage of an advantage or opportunity You can Google the word prefer for other examples. Is there any rule about using 'prefer' in prepositions? Yes there is, when using the word prefer in a verb sense as a preposition, the verb must be in the past tense. I prefer to stay here instead of going to the airport. He prefers to stay there instead of going to the airport. I prefer to stay there instead of going to the airport. But if you are using it as an adjective, then you don't have to use the past tense. I prefer the red car to the yellow car. In your sentence, it's a noun, so you have
