Why is the. on the website of chief executive officer john hollis. Many thanks, john. As you can see, our fourth quarter was very good, especially in. Cardiff: Frank Wright.. Corporate Reputation. CIRAS document: evidence of corporate image. Document:You might think the headline sounds like it's straight from the Twilight Zone, but that's not the case. It's a real option being offered in the Advanced Productivity Report. That's right: the report, which is a subset of the annual APQ study, is seeing a lot more companies investing in work-from-home initiatives. We're talking about the option to work from home, not just telecommuting, which is a small number of the businesses we asked about in our study. In fact, we asked 2,496 executives all over the globe about their workplace policies and what options their companies offer. The online survey took about four minutes and was conducted in February 2016. While less than a third of companies offered that option, it's a big one, company executives tell us. The most common reasons are to cut costs and to capitalize on the skills of home-based workers. Although it's not without risk, many companies see it as a way to create efficiencies and connect with employees more efficiently. Also notable from the survey: Almost half the companies we reached out to were still evaluating whether to offer the option to telecommute. It took only a few months for that to happen, with 18% of the businesses that responded having decided to offer workers the option. It's also worth noting that 67% of the companies that offer telecommuting are at least moderately successful, while just 41% of those who don't offer it are. We also found out that the quality of that telecommuting experience is particularly important to companies. It was the second most effective option. While this option isn't something most people think of when talking about telecommuting, the survey results show that it can be a competitive advantage. In fact, it's the second most successful option out of more than 100 in the report. It beat out telecommuting for work in the office, so if you're a telecommuter hoping to be able to nix that commute, this option can help. Work
