Putting Illustrator to work One of the most common uses of Adobe Illustrator is to create graphics, such as logos, icons, and photos, to use as stock images. The program enables you to combine images or illustrations with text to create customized, print-ready graphics. The program allows you to create layers of art to work on at different times. For example, you may use a layer to create graphics for a website while using another for posters or banners. Illustrator enables you to create a wide variety of designs with multiple artboards and the ability to create and move art. If you're familiar with page layouts of newspapers and magazines, you can create two-page spreads to print your design out as a newspaper advertisement. Illustrator also offers many features to assist in creating content for the Web. You can create Flash, HTML, PHP, XML, and RSS feeds, as well as Adobe Acrobat files for printing.

Immunomodulatory activities of triterpene acid glycosides from the leaves of Bidens pilosa. In order to isolate the major active constituents from Bidens pilosa, a traditional Chinese herb used for the treatment of fever and chills, various triterpene acid glycosides were isolated from the ethyl acetate fraction of the leaves. Their structures were determined by spectroscopic and chemical analyses, and their immunomodulatory activities against thymocytes, splenocytes and mixed lymphocyte reaction (MLR) were evaluated. Among these, betulinic acid-3-O- α -l-arabinopyranoside (1) and betulinic acid-3-O- α -l-rhamnopyranoside (2) exhibited significant immunomodulatory activities, and 0.3-30 μ g/mL of 1 and 2 were effective in enhancing thymocyte proliferation. In addition, 1 and 2 at 10 μ g/mL enhanced the killing activity of splenocytes against L1210 cells, while 30 μ g/mL of 1 was more effective than 10 μ g/mL of 2 in enhancing the MLR. Thus, triterpene acid glycosides may have the therapeutic potential for immune disorders. FRANKFURT (Reuters) - German automotive industry association VDA on Thursday called on the European Union to agree on a post-Brexit customs union with Britain for the sake of the industry, days after U.S. President Donald Trump said he could help the industry by re-opening the country's borders to imported cars. VDA President Andreas Scheuer attends a news conference on the auto sector in Frankfurt, Germany, June 27, 2017. REUTERS/Kai Pfaffenbach The warning from the country's main industry lobby comes as Britain is in the middle of its exit talks with the EU that could end in a "no deal" Brexit. If it leaves the bloc with no agreement, Britain risks losing access to its biggest market for car imports. "The key question now is what form of a post-Brexit customs union can be negotiated that preserves the integrity of the single market for the automotive industry," VDA president Andreas Scheuer said in a statement. "Moreover, without a customs union Britain will face significant disruption to the import of finished cars from the EU," he said. The EU says
