Pin 0 shares The all new and improved Rugged Maniac RR hybrid bicycle. Shock resistant but totally commando. I've been riding the new Rugged Maniac RR for just under a week now and have been pleasantly surprised by it. It does well at a ride near my home where there are some challenging hills and trails. In that time it's handled everything I've thrown at it. I've been in places where I've run into some fast moving vehicles on the road and the bike has handled those encounters no problem. For those of you wondering, yes I did have the thing on a rack so I could ride it like that. The rack is standard issue for these bicycles and the bike folds down into a bundle that easily fits the rack. It really is very cool. What I like: Light. It weighs in at under 18 pounds with a 200 milligram titanium fork. I was initially concerned that the bike's light weight would make it handle like a turtle but it does the opposite. When I started riding it I was instantly impressed with how easy it was to move around in the saddle and standing up. All one needs is a good leg and the bike delivers. The only time it takes a little effort is when moving over an obstacle. Rugged. The frame and the parts are pretty rugged. It handles the difficult road surfaces without complaint. The geometry. It's a very well thought out machine. There was a good reason in my mind for the bike's geometry. I wanted it to ride like a bicycle. It is definitely a taller 595f342e71
