Proteomic analysis of human plasma reveals BMP-6/TRPM7 pathway activation in hematopoietic stem cell mobilization. The development of more effective stem cell mobilizing agents to be used for autologous and allogeneic transplants has been a major focus in the field of cancer biology. Here, we report a proteomic analysis of human plasma of healthy volunteers following four consecutive daily injections of filgrastim (G-CSF) or pegfilgrastim (pegfilgrastim) in an attempt to identify clinical variables associated with the mobilization of hematopoietic stem cells (HSCs). Filgrastim and pegfilgrastim were administered as a single subcutaneous injection at a dose of 6 µg/kg body weight daily for 4 consecutive days. Plasma proteins from 10 healthy volunteers were analyzed by 2-DE and MS. Four of the identified proteins, Factor V, BMP-6, factor D and TRPM7, were shown to be significantly elevated following filgrastim treatment. Two of these proteins, BMP-6 and factor D, were further validated by ELISA. The involvement of TRPM7 in G-CSF-induced HSC mobilization was confirmed by siRNA-mediated knockdown in vitro. Both factor V and BMP-6 were shown to be induced by TRPM7 knockdown in a similar fashion to how they were elevated by G-CSF administration. A temporal proteomic analysis further confirmed the increase of B renaultMolecular analysis of invasive carcinomas in the bladder: a study of 46

cases. We analyzed 46 bladder tumors for mutations in ras oncogenes and the p53 tumor suppressor gene and determined their association with specific histological subtypes, clinicopathological characteristics, and patterns of progression. All tumors were analyzed for mutations of the K-ras, N-ras, and H-ras genes and the p53 gene by direct sequencing and the polymerase chain reaction-single-strand conformational polymorphism technique. Tumors were divided into low-grade, high-grade, and superficial lesions and into a series of progressing invasive tumors. Of 46 tumors, 15 were papilloma, 29 low-grade and 5 high-grade carcinomas (13 transitional cell carcinomas, and 16 squamous cell carcinomas). In the high-grade series, ras mutations were present in 4 cases, all of which had a papilloma, but none of the tumors with a nonpapillary histology was mutated ( $P = 0.0001$ ); all 5 papilloma harbored ras mutations. A single case with a squamous-type carcinoma showed a p53 mutation. No correlation was found between histological type, grade, and ras mutation status. In the low-grade carcinomas, in contrast, ras mutations were present in 11 of 29 cases (38%) and all were associated with papilloma. Ras mutations are more frequently detected in low-grade rather than high-grade bladder carcinomas and are associated with papillary histology. Furthermore, papilloma tumors are less frequently mutated than other superficial forms of bladder cancer.

This invention relates to the collection of moisture and leachate from a large array of cellulosic material. In particular, it relates to a device for the collection and transport of the leachate with or without the immobilized cellulosic material, and the subsequent treatment and disposal of the resulting leachate. In the manufacture of pulp and paper, large
