"University of California (1957)" $('#categories').html(content); should insert 'University of California (1957)' into a dropdown but isn't How do I change the array into a string that will be inserted into the select dropdown? A: As in the first line of your question you want to concatenate the "contents" of two arrays: var category = ["University of California (1957)", "University of California (1957)"]; var categoryContent = $.map(category, function(category) { return "" + category + ""; }); // "var content = "University of California (1957)"; // $('#categories').html(content); $('#categories').html(categoryContent);

Teacher & Coordinator considerations There is flexibility with the arrangement for a general contractor, and you are not restricted to one person as you would be with a planning-only contract. You have the option to appoint one person to the project, with an assistant. Both individuals would have to work within the role set by the architect. If you choose to recruit a general contractor, we can liaise with the architect to ensure the design is reflected in the finished building. You would need to allocate the costs of appointing a contractor to the grant. You would be responsible for the appointment costs up to the point the contract is signed, and for those costs going forward. You are advised to appoint an assistant if you choose to employ a contractor. They can be on short-term or long-term basis. Microsoft and Apple in virtual reality - velmu ===== mskd00 This is such a ridiculous question to pose. The answer is obvious. VR is the next step for PCs and phones. Game devs and software developers are already building apps for VR and Oculus will build a great foundation for them. In 6d1f23a050
