A new protest looks to convince more people to speak up for commuters who have been injured or killed on the Sacramento Area Rapid Transit trains. On Sunday, the Stop Rail Safe Walkers! campaign will gather at the railroad tracks where passengers get on and off the trains in downtown Sacramento and step in front of the trains to demand a safer system. Sue Tucker and her husband Russ have been trying to warn riders about the dangers of the trains for years, she said. "I just could not believe the statistic that we have over 300 people die in this country every day. We are the best in the world in terms of technology and what we can do to keep people safe, but we are the worst in terms of safety of our work force," Tucker said. Story continues below video. Dozens of people die and more than 300 are injured every year on the trains. The campaign organizers say their goal is to train, educate and equip the public to prevent accidents. They also want to see a commitment by officials to implement changes. Sgt. Rob Beaudry with the Sacramento Police Department said the department can't do much about the problems because it is a federal agency. Beaudry says the department's goal is to encourage riders to use other means of getting around Sacramento. "If you live in Sacramento and you travel more than 10 miles, you might as well walk or you might as well ride a bike or ride your scooter because you're not going to get any safer on a railcar." The campaign is hoping the public will come out to join them Sunday. This story will be updated if more information is provided.
