That's great, but Rockstar are also looking to continue working on the player experience in Grand Theft Auto Online. The Grand Theft Auto Online webpage has been updated with the latest details on some of the game's promised weekly content. These include events such as the previous GTA Online Online Jam Party Event and a brand new GTA Online Online Raid Mode. In today's patch we are now reducing the City Population and fixing several issues. With the release of the expanded and enhanced versions of GTA V and GTA Online in March, you may want to temper your excitement just a bit. According to Brazilian dataminer and purported insider Matheusvictorbr, development of the Expanded and Enhanced versions of GTA V and GTA Online have been complicated, and theres a good chance the release slips to April or May at least. Our leaker also expects to see a Rockstar blog post on the subject soon (you can read a translation of the following tweets below). In the recent GTA V patch notes, Rockstar stated that the patch allows players to change weapons used to fire guns. The patch also eliminates the need for 20 or more threads in the game to improve rendering performance. Other small tweaks have been made to vehicles, pedestrians, and incidental objects. As Rockstar continue to work on their open-world games, having released all three of the GTA titles to date, it's not been long since we saw the next-gen versions of Grand Theft Auto Online arrive. But like the previous game, this isn't really a next-generation experience in itself.
