The opening events in Sydney on Friday, February 14, bring out the house of flying daggers movie free download hindi movie of Chinese film. Its a major event. Not only because the Chinese would be in town, but also because that night will mark the premier of the new Chinese film, House of Flying Daggers, which is in limited release in China since last November, and the Chinese cinema market is big. Another Chinese film, Fallen Angels, is in its third week of release. "One of the scariest things for me in the review process was The House of Flying Daggers, the movie. It is from the classic novel by Jin Yong, and it was made almost 30 years ago by Zhao Liang, a very popular director. He became a god after this movie. This is a classic tale of revenge, of vengeance," says William Yuen, co-founder and director of the Ebert Symposium. "And this movie is legendary. If a movie is too good and too big, it doesn't work. Anyhow, we thought that House of Flying Daggers would be a good movie to kick off this Ebert Symposium." Director Zhao Liang made hundreds of movies, the best of which were Raise the Red Lantern and Hero, the latter starring Jet Li, who is China's most famous actor, and who plays the role of a Ming dynasty general. Raise the Red Lantern is a very famous movie, indeed the first part of Wu Xing, or Romance of the Three Kingdoms, that might have been why I associated Jet Li with revolution. Jet Li played a character called Bao Si, a general who forsook his sworn allegiance to Ming dynasty in the North and went south. As Wu Xing tells the story, in the north, Ming armies were being defeated by the Mongols. When Bao Si retreated from the North to the south, he turned out to be a traitor. But he reformed as the general of the right, and fought the Emperor of Qin against the Mongols, who are the enemy of the Ming regime.
