Online poker, like many online games, has a huge revenue problem. There is a lot more competition than ever before. The poker industry is trying its best to combat the legal and moral issues that plague the industry but it has not worked. The only ways to fix the problems are to make online poker easier to understand, to make it legal, and to make more revenue. There is no easy way out for the online poker industry. No amount of social gaming can replace the millions of dollars being lost to scamsters and credit card thieves. There is no way to reduce the number of potential victims.

It is a numbers game. And the US poker market is far too small to make a dent in the action. It is going to be more and more difficult for the online poker industry to maintain its current 1-2% of the poker industry. There are few good signs for the online poker industry in 2010. Every year that goes by, it becomes more and more difficult to convince people that online poker is safe, fun, and secure. The biggest threat to online poker could be increased regulation. The problem of the scam is actually caused by the structure of the poker game. The structure allows so much room for misinformation and for people to make money at other people's expense. The basic premise of poker is for each player to bluff until they lose. Scamsters get into the game by hiding their true intentions. Some use the game as a vehicle for theft. Some don't even play poker at all. They just try to take advantage of people who play poker. But what makes poker so enticing is there is always another hand going. The other players in the game are always trying to figure out if the card is a bluff or if the card is good for them. People are always trying to call in the worst hand that they have so that they can bluff the players who don't have the hand. The problem for the online poker industry is that people are tricked into thinking that bad players play good poker. They think that the cards are being played randomly. They think that the cards were not controlled. They are convinced that they have a random chance at beating the pros. The result is that they lose their money.
